North Little Rock Street Department Employees On The Job

Provided by Cheryl Brown, NLR Street Department
North Little Rock Street Department employees work hard for the residents of our city.

Paul Reeves (above), a truck driver volunteers his time to provide extensive training for any employees in the City who would like assistance and to prepare them for CDL testing with the Arkansas State Police. Testing can be strenuous and includes both a written and a three-part skills exam.

Our employees who earn CDLs are eligible for promotion. Several have been promoted recently! Pictured above right are: Corey Roark, Bryan Rougely,

The North Little Rock Street Department has several positions open in the department with opportunity for advancement.

Pictured on this page are several of our great Street Department Employees filling pot holes around the city using both a cold mix and hot mix. When you see these guys working, give them a friendly wave to thank them for their efforts.

Our Shelter is FULL

North Little Rock Animal Control responds to over 850 calls per month. These include everything from testing bats for rabies, to removing road kill from city streets. However, a primary function is pickup up or receiving loose or unwanted animals in our city (and receiving animals from the county).

In the past, the Shelter has adopted an average of 900 animals each year.

The North Little Rock Animal Shelter is full. This is a critical time for the animals in their care. Unless they find homes immediately, animals will have to be euthanized.

If you or someone you know is thinking about adopting a cat or dog, please encourage them to visit our shelter located in Burns Park on Championship Drive (just off I-40).

Pictured above is Tora, a female Shepherd mix who made her television debut last week on KATV's morning news show.

Right is Charlie, a Beagle mix. These two along with countless others at the shelter are looking for a forever home.

Will it be yours?

If so, call or visit our shelter today.

Exciting news for North Little Rock Friends Of Animals members and all animal lovers!!!

A major renovation is planned for the North Little Rock Animal Shelter. Our shelter is quite old, dark, ...and uncomfortably warm in the summer months.

Happily, a number of improvements are planned to increase the comfort of the animals and to enhance their chances of adoption by having new cages, sky lights, and air conditioning in the kennel area. It is estimated that we will need $50,000.00 to make the desired improvements.

Our shelter is the only one in Central AR without air conditioning...and this is Priority One. It will take right at $12,000 to air condition this space. Once we reach the $12,000, the air conditioning can be installed and the other improvements will follow as funds are raised. We have already received a generous contribution of $5,000...so we need only $7,000 more. Summer is fast approaching...can you help us reach this goal so we can make the animals more comfortable? This will also make them more likely to be adopted because potential adopters will have a comfortable environment when they are meeting the animals. We know many of you who have joined our page don't even live in our city, but you are interested in our work. We are appealing to all members...please help us. Remember, all contributions are tax deductible as allowed by law. No amount is too small, $3.00, $5.00, $10.00 or more if you can afford it...PLEASE send a donation to North Little Rock Friends of Animals, P.O. Box 5757, North Little Rock, AR 72119. Thanks for reading this and for any help you can provide.

This year speakers included Rev. Randy Jumper, First Assembly of God NLR, Dr. Gordon Garlington, III Pastor, Park Hill Presbyterian Church, Lt. Gov. Tim Griffin, Rev. Ray Williams, Fellowship Bible Church,

Alderman Murry Witcher, Dr. Luke Conway, Pastor Lakewood United Methodist Church, Pulaski County Judge Barry Hyde, Rev. James Henrich, Chaplain, Arkansas Children's Hospital and Lamar Davis, Arkansas Public Service Commission

Civic leaders, elected officials, military personnel, police, fire and emergency service workers and many others participated.

Managing adult-onset allergies

*By Joshua Kennedy, M.D., Assistant Professor,
Division of Allergy and Immunology,
UAMS College of Medicine*

Found in City & Town—Arkansas Municipal League

For many, allergies can be a life-long battle. Others make it into adulthood before they see symptoms. That's right—just because you're an adult and haven't suffered from allergies doesn't mean you won't. Every year, many adults wonder why they've suddenly developed itchy, watery eyes, a runny nose, or a food allergy. While it may seem at the moment there is no relief in sight, there are treatment options available.

Allergies affect about 7.8 percent of adults in the United States, and about 10 to 30 percent of people worldwide. So, why did you make it all the way past adolescence before you noticed symptoms? There are a number of possible reasons. Childhood allergies can fade and come back. It could be your new-found allergy initially occurred when you were a baby or small child; it's just that you don't remember it. Other possible reasons include more exposure to the particular allergen or a person becoming more sensitive to the allergen, both causing symptoms.

Genetics can play a role. It's common, in genetically predisposed cases, for responses to occur early in life, fade, and then return in adulthood. This is the one and only time it's okay to blame your mom, as the allergies of the mother are the more likely indicator of the allergies the child will inherit.

There are several culprits that can lead adults to have allergy symptoms, but some of the most common are pet dander, pollen, mold, and dust mites.

Developing food allergies is far less common in adulthood. Developing allergies to milk, eggs, and wheat rarely happens after childhood. It's most common for adults to develop an allergy to shellfish. Some can enjoy shellfish their entire childhood and into adulthood, but then develop an allergy to it. Other food allergies include alpha-gal, an allergen in red meat, and oral allergy syndrome, which typically presents as an allergy to birch or ragweed that can cause severe itching when consuming raw fruits.

The number-one way to treat allergies is avoidance. If it's animal dander that affects you most, it's best to keep the pets out of your bedroom. Letting your four-legged companions in the bedroom and on your bed leads to more exposure and more suffering. For pollen allergens, avoidance is much more difficult. Some strategies include wearing a mask, keeping your windows closed and regularly changing your home's air filters.

If avoidance does not work, medication is the next line of defense. This can include nasal steroids, some of which can now be purchased over-the-counter, or an antihistamine. Another option is allergy shots given at an allergist's office. These can be an effective option for people who do not want to take allergy medications or for those who don't get effective relief from medications. If allergy shots are consistently maintained for three to five years, medications may not be required afterward.

Before testing for certain allergens, it's best to know your history and make sure symptoms correlate with the specific allergen. For instance, a perceived allergy to ragweed would not be possible if you only show symptoms in the spring, as ragweed only pollinates in the fall.

Just like ragweed, the pollination or trouble season depends on the allergen. Seasonal-allergy sufferers are at risk in spring and fall, while those that suffer from allergies to animal dander, dust mites, or mold are at risk year-round.

The University of Arkansas for Medical Sciences (UAMS) opened an allergy and immunology clinic in 2013 that specializes in serving adults with asthma, seasonal allergies, food allergies, chronic hives, drug allergies, stinging insect allergies, and immune system deficiencies. Call 501-686-8000 for an appointment. Patients do not need a referral.

Explaining territorial jurisdiction

By Jim von Tungeln
Arkansas Municipal League

The issue of planning area boundaries has drawn much attention in legislative circles in recent years. This follows the decisions of many cities to extend these boundaries beyond their corporate limits. Those who have never participated in municipal planning may see this as an unwarranted intrusion into the lives of rural residents. It seems both worthwhile and timely to examine the reasons that cities use this sometimes-controversial approach.

First, it is important to understand that this is not a new practice. Frank Bachus Williams, an attorney, wrote of the wisdom of planning for up to three miles beyond a city's boundary in the book The Law of City Planning and Zoning, published by Macmillan back in 1922. This was four years before the U. S. Supreme Court ruled that zoning was constitutional in Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty, 272 U.W. 365 (1926). Then, in 1958, our state adopted planning statutes giving cities the power to plan and enforce development regulations within a territorial jurisdiction that extended up to five miles beyond the city limits.

Where did our state get this idea? Oddly enough, from a man not remembered for his liberal tendencies; Herbert Hoover. As Secretary of Commerce, he supported and promoted city planning, observing, "The enormous losses in human happiness and in money, which have resulted from lack of city plans which take into account the conditions of modern life, need little proof."

Following up on this belief, Hoover's Commerce Department published both a Standard Zoning Act in 1924 and a Standard City Planning Enabling Act in 1928, both designed to guide states in these processes. It is the latter that contained the idea of extending a city's territorial jurisdiction for five miles beyond the corporate limits.

The committee that created these standard acts comprised some of the best experts on city planning at the time, including the immortal Frederick Law Olmstead, designer of New York's Central Park, and Alfred Bettman, who successfully argued Euclid v. Ambler for the cities. Many of the members later formed the American City Planning Institute in 1917.

Unfortunately, few files exist concerning the works of the committee that produced the standard acts, so we are forced to guess at the intent of some provisions. It is important to note, however, that the documents stress the relationship between regulations and the plans those regulations seek to implement. Thus our state's planning statutes grant zoning to cities "Following adoption and filing of the land use plan." In similar fashion, the statutes provide that "Following adoption and filing of a master street plan, the planning commission may prepare and shall administer, after approval of the legislative body, regulations controlling the development of land."

It is this provision that might provide the best insight into what is commonly referred to as "extraterritorial jurisdiction," that is, the power to plan and enforce subdivision regulations outside the city limits. Transportation systems cannot stop at the city limits and the experts assembled by Commerce Secretary Hoover would have been well aware of that fact. As the name of the parent organization suggests, commerce was a major concern of the committee preparing the standard acts. It would be decades before counties ventured into the field of planning, so the burden of maintaining transportation systems to transport goods and services fell on the cities.

Imagine development occurring haphazardly between communities in a manner that neither reflected nor respected a logical transportation system. Requiring subdivision plat approval by a city for outlying areas begins to make more sense when we consider it from that viewpoint.

Another clue for this specific power of cities comes from lawyer Williams in the work cited earlier. He urges cities to "...plan for the community to come." This is consistent with the advice Mr. von Tungeln gives to cities with growing populations: Plan and implement as if your city was already the population it will be in 10 years or so. In this way, future utility and transportation systems can be planned and programmed more efficiently. It also allows the projection of needed staffing and support needs.

Modern times create more issues surrounding the control of land beyond a city's limits. The problem of providing adequate fire protection to areas served by rural water systems is fully documented. These systems surround large portions of many cities in the state. The level of water service provided cannot meet the requirements of the Arkansas Fire Code. Thus, they may be excluded forever from becoming a part of the city although they represent a logical extension of a growing community.

The jurisdiction of the cities in our state went through a reduction in the legislative session of 2013. Most cities now face a reduced territorial jurisdiction of one mile, with a maximum of three miles for the largest city in the state. It is important to note, also, that the territorial jurisdiction of a city is not the same as the planning area. The planning area boundary is formed within the territorial jurisdiction and may or may not include all of it. The planning commission must "...prepare and maintain a map showing the general location of streets, public ways, and public property and the boundaries of the area within the territorial jurisdiction for which it will prepare plans, ordinances, and regulations. The map shall be known as the planning area map." This is the area in which a qualifying city may operate.

Tips for 911 calling

Found at www.fcc.gov/guides/wireless-911-services

Consumers making a 911 call from a wireless phone should remember the following:

- ◇ Tell the emergency operator the location of the emergency right away.
- ◇ Provide the emergency operator with your wireless phone number, so if the call gets disconnected, the emergency operator can call you back.
- ◇ PSAPs (Public Safety Answering Point) currently lack the technical capability to receive texts, photos and videos.
- ◇ If your wireless phone is not “initialized” (meaning you do not have a contract for service with a wireless service provider), and your emergency call gets disconnected, you must call the emergency operator back because the operator does not have your telephone number and cannot contact you.
- ◇ To help public safety personnel allocate emergency resources, learn and use the designated number in your state for highway accidents or other non life-threatening incidents (States often reserve specific numbers for these types of incidents. For example Arkansas is 911 or cellphone-only: *55 (star 55).)
- ◇ Refrain from programming your phone to automatically dial 911 when one button, such as the “9” key, is pressed. Unintentional wireless 911 calls, which often occur when auto-dial keys are inadvertently pressed, cause problems for emergency call centers.
- ◇ If your wireless phone came pre-programmed with the auto-dial 911 feature already turned on, turn this feature off (consult your user manual for instructions)
- ◇ Lock your keypad when you’re not using your wireless phone to help prevent accidental calls to 911.
- ◇ Consider creating a contact in your wireless phone’s memory with the name “ICE” (In Case of Emergency), which lists the phone numbers of people you want to have notified in an emergency.

Ask about your handset’s E911 capabilities

When replacing your handset, ask about E911 capabilities. Some providers may offer incentives to encourage customers without location-capable phones to obtain new location-capable phones. Some providers choose to prevent reactivation of older handsets that do not have E911 capability, or they may adopt various other measures. If a provider declines to reactivate a handset that is not location-capable, the FCC requires the provider to deliver a 911 call from that handset to the appropriate PSAP.

Improving wireless 911 rules

The FCC has adopted rules aimed at improving the reliability of wireless 911 services and the accuracy of the location information transmitted with a wireless 911 call, as part of our efforts to improve public safety. The improvements help providing Public Safety Answering Points (PSAPs) with meaningful, accurate location information from wireless 911 callers in order to dispatch local emergency responders to the correct location and to provide assistance to 911 callers more quickly.

The FCC’s wireless 911 rules apply to all wireless licenses, broadband Personal Communications Service (PCS) licenses and certain Specialized Mobile Radio (SMR) licenses. Mobile Satellite Service (MSS) providers, however, are currently excluded.

The FCC’s basic 911 rules require wireless service providers to transmit all 911 calls to a PSAP, regardless of whether the caller subscribes to the provider’s service or not.

Phase I Enhanced 911 (E911) rules require wireless service providers to provide the PSAP with the telephone number of the originator of a wireless 911 call and the location of the cell site or base station transmitting the call.

Phase II E911 rules require wireless service providers to provide more precise location information to PSAPs; specifically, the latitude and longitude of the caller. This information must be accurate to within 50 to 300 meters depending upon the type of location technology used.

The FCC recently required wireless carriers to provide more precise location information to PSAPs. As a result, wireless carriers will be required to comply with the FCC’s location accuracy rules at either a county-based or PSAP-based geographic level. The new standards apply to outdoor measurements only, as indoor use poses unique obstacles.

ways to unwind

By Shamash Alidina, Everyday Health Guest Contributor

Mindfulness meditation is a simple and powerful way of easing your stress. There's no harm in a bit of stress. And if you can handle it, there's no harm in a lot of stress, as long as you know how to take a break from the pressure regularly. But everyone's different. And no matter who you are, you'll be faced with challenges in life's journey. When that next challenge comes along, what resources do you have to bounce back? Mindfulness is a great too, not just for bouncing back from your latest setback, but for living in a more conscious, awake, and fulfilling way.

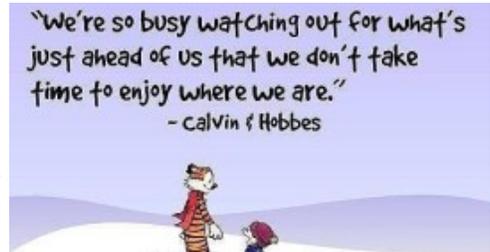

If you've joined a mindfulness program, or are reading about mindfulness but struggling to engage in the meditation practice, here are a few tips for you:

- ◇ Be clear at the start of your mindfulness practice that you're interested in the present moment, not the past or future. If your thoughts about the past, which is dead and gone, or the future, which is ultimately uncertain, then your mind is bound to wander around a lot. Be clear about your intentions within yourself to get yourself off to a flying start! Yes, your mind can wander, but you'll begin to dip into that peaceful silence between the mental chatter.

- ◇ Be accountable. Make a commitment to practice mindfulness daily, and share that commitment with someone else. That way, you're accountable to them and your chance of sticking to your discipline increases greatly.
- ◇ Enjoy your mindfulness practice! This is a time for rest, renewal, and rejuvenation. Discover how you can make mindfulness a joy for yourself. If you're doing a sitting meditation, get nice and cozy. Wrap yourself in your favorite blanket. Cuddle your favorite teddy. Do whatever you need to feel happy in your space.
- ◇ Turn mindfulness into "kindfulness." Be as kind as you can to yourself. If you're doing mindfulness of breath, be aware of your breathing with a sense of compassion, warmth, and friendliness. As if each breath matters — because it does.

Lemon Cream Cheese Bundt Cake with Lemon Glaze

- 1 box Betty Crocker SuperMoist yellow cake mix
 - 1 cup milk
 - 1 package (3 oz) cream cheese (softened)
 - 2 Tbsp. grated lemon peed (from 2 large lemons)
 - 1/4 cup lemon juice (from 1 large lemon)
 - 3 eggs
- Glaze
- 2 cups powdered sugar
 - 2 Tbsp. lemon juice (from 1 large lemon)

Heat oven to 325°F. Generously spray 10- or 12-cup fluted tube cake pan.

In large bowl, beat cake ingredients with electric mixer on low speed 1 minute, scraping bowl constantly. Increase speed to medium; beat 2 minutes. Pour into pan.

Bake 40 to 45 minutes or until toothpick inserted in center comes out clean. Cool 15 minutes; turn upside down onto cooling rack or heatproof serving plate, and remove pan. Cool completely, about 1 hour.

Place cake on serving plate. In medium bowl, beat powdered sugar and lemon juice, a little at a time, using whisk until thick glaze forms. (You may not need all the juice). Pour evenly over cake. Store cake loosely covered.

Chicken Tortilla Soup

2 whole Boneless, Skinless Chicken Breasts

1 Tablespoon Olive Oil

1-1/2 teaspoon Cumin

1 teaspoon Chili Powder

1/2 teaspoon Garlic Powder

1/2 teaspoon Salt

1 Tablespoon Olive Oil

1 cup Diced Onion

1/4 cup Diced Green Bell Pepper

1/4 cup Red Bell Pepper

3 cloves Garlic, minced

1 can (10 Oz. Can) Rotel

32 ounces, fluid Low Sodium Chicken Stock

3 Tablespoons Tomato Paste

4 cups hot water

2 cans (15 Oz. Can) Black Beans, drained

3 Tablespoons Cornmeal or Masa

5 whole Corn Tortillas, Cut into uniform Strips around 2 to 3 inches

FOR THE GARNISHES:

Sour Cream

Diced Avocado

Diced Red Onion

Salsa Or Pico De Gallo

Grated Monterey Jack Cheese

Cilantro

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Mix cumin, chili pepper, garlic powder, and salt. Drizzle 1 tablespoon olive oil on chicken breasts, then sprinkle a small amount of spice mix on both sides. Set aside the rest of the spice mix.

Place chicken breasts on a baking sheet. Bake for 20 to 25 minutes, or until chicken is done. Use two forks to shred chicken. Set aside.

Heat 1 tablespoon olive oil in a pot over medium high heat. Add onions, red pepper, green pepper, and minced garlic. Stir and begin cooking, then add the rest of the spice mix. Stir to combine, then add shredded chicken and stir.

Pour in Rotel, chicken stock, tomato paste, water, and black beans. Bring to a boil, then reduce heat to a simmer. Simmer for 45 minutes, uncovered.

Mix cornmeal with a small amount of water. Pour into the soup, then simmer for an additional 30 minutes. Check seasonings, adding more if needed---add more chili powder if it needs more spice, and be sure not to under salt. Turn off heat and allow to sit for 15 to 20 minutes before serving. Five minutes before serving, gently stir in tortilla strips.

Ladle into bowls, then top with sour cream, diced red onion, diced avocado, pico de gallo, and grated cheese, if you have it! (The garnishes really make the soup delicious.)
